STUDENT CONSULTING SERVICES ORGANIZED

With the aid of a provincial grant and a modest suite of offices in Assiniboia Hall, a team of graduate and undergraduate student consultants from the Faculty of Business Administration and Commerce have embarked on a program designed to be of mutual benefit to the students themselves and to the business community. While offering low or no-cost consulting services to small businesses that might otherwise be unable to obtain them, the students are acquiring practical experience in a business environment.

The program procedure is initiated by the businessman who places a request for assistance to the Alberta Student Consultants (ASC). An interview is held with the prospective client, usually at his place of business. He is first made aware of what the program entails and then the nature of his specific concern is discussed. On the basis of this interview, the client is accepted or referred elsewhere.

Those students with the skills suitable to the client's requirements are delegated and spend approximately two weeks investigating various aspects of the client's operation. The result of this, a complete and documented report, is provided to the client so he may refer to it after the consulting assignment has been completed.

While the report formally signifies the end of the assignment, ASC contacts the client at a later date to obtain feedback and to provide further assistance where possible. The sole charge incurred by the business is a nominal administrative fee for the materials and clerical preparation of the report.

Judging by the growing number of low or no-cost small business consulting services now being offered by many university business schools across the country, today's businessman, while still initially skeptical of the students' abilities, seems to be developing an awareness of the potential assistance these students may provide. In Ontario alone, 12 universities are running break-even consulting services manned by about 120 graduate and undergraduate students this year. The continued success of these programs is an indication of the validity of the function served there and the opportunities awaiting a program of similar nature within the Province of Alberta.

ICOGRADA MEETS HERE NEXT MONTH

The International Council of Graphic Design Associations (ICOGRADA) is holding its first North American conference on this campus July 7 to 12. This will also be the first time that ICOGRADA will have held its conference in a university setting. The theme of the conference is to be "Education for graphic design, graphic design for education," or "Edugraphic" for short.

Its aim will be to focus the attention of designers, educationalists, industrialists, and the general public on the importance of graphic design by means of project demonstrations, lectures, group discussions, exhibitions, and film shows. The main theme has been divided into six sub-topics: 1. Visual communication in general education; 2. Research into teaching and learning; 3. Research in visual communication; 4. Design education for special groups and purposes; 5. Social aspects of visual design education; 6. Design dilemmas of today. All the main lectures, exhibitions, and film shows will be open to the public.

Walter Jungkind, Professor of Art and Design and currently President of ICOGRADA, is Chairman of the Organizing Committee; Peter Bartl, Assistant Professor of Art and Design, is in charge of the exhibitions.

Among the speakers will be Olt Aicher, Germany, chief designer for the Munich Olympic Games; John Aston and John Cook, England, chief designers for the Open University and the British Broadcasting Corporation; Robbins Elliott, Canada, Director General of the Office of Design, Ottawa; Allan Fleming, Canada, Director of Design, University of Toronto Press; Jerome Perlmutter, USA, Co-ordinator of Graphic Design, National Endowment for the Arts, Washington, D.C.; and Masaru Katsumie, Japan, chief editor of International Design magazine, Japan. There will be many others.

Several exhibitions will be mounted: on book design, Atlas Alberta, Eskimo sculpture, metric posters, Dutch posters, and work by staff and students of the Department of Art and Design. Details of the exhibitions and further information on the conference program will be published in next week's Folio.

ICOGRADA was founded in London in April 1963 and incorporated as a nonprofit organization with legal seat in Amsterdam in 1964. The Council is an association of

APPOINTMENTS

Jo Ann Creore has been appointed Chairman of the Department of Romance Languages effective July 1, 1975. Dr. Creore has been on staff here since 1966. She holds a BA from Lake Erie College, and an MA and ABD from the University of Washington. Editor of a collection of the papers of Eugene Dorfman, Dr. Creore has also completed a computerization of Latin Language data. She currently has underway a joint project with B.L. Rochet on phonological variables in Edmonton French.

W.J. Jones, Professor in the Department of History, has been named Chairman of that department. He received his BA and PhD from the University of London, England. Dr. Jones joined the staff here in 1961 after leaving the position of Senior Assistant to Sir John Neale, History of Parliament Trust, with the Houses of Parliament in Westminster, England. As a member of the Advisory Board of the Dictionary of Tudor and Stuart Biography, he is involved in a project which entails the rewriting of the old Dictionary of National Biography with respect to the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries. (No photograph available.)

independent member associations and corresponding members from 37 countries. Previous conferences have been held in Zurich, Switzerland; Bled, Yugoslavia; Eindhoven, Holland; Vienna, Austria; London, England; and Dusseldorf, Germany.

Anyone may register for the conference. Fees are $60 for full registration ($30 for students); $15 daily attendance ($5, students). Registration forms and further information may be obtained by calling 432-5557.

PEOPLE

- J.W. Chalmers, Associate Professor of Educational Foundations, will retire June 30, 1975.
- Alice Nakamura, Assistant Professor, and Masao Nakamura, Associate Professor, both of the Faculty of Business Administration and Commerce, presented an invited paper at a workshop sponsored by the National Bureau of Economic Research held at the Urban Institute in Washington D.C. A paper written by the Professors Nakamura in co-operation with Guy H. Orcutt of Yale University has been accepted for publication in the Journal of the American Statistical Association.

ADDENDUM

In the June 12, 1975 Stone Owl column of Folio, proper credit should have been given to Mrs. Joyce Kerr, the Administrator of the CAB cafeteria. It was Mrs. Kerr who, when she managed the Tuck Shop lunch counter, first provided us with those luscious, knotted cinnamon buns which, by the way, are also named after Tuck Shop.

NORMA BROTHERSTON 1920 - 1975

Norma Brotherston, Administrative Assistant in the Department of Mathematics, died June 10 following a lengthy illness.

Mrs. Brotherston, born and educated in Edmonton, joined Mathematics as departmental secretary in 1963 working with Leo Moser, then the head of the department. Her role expanded with departmental growth under A.L. Dulmage, J.R. McGregor, and the present chairman S.G. Ghurye, and she was appointed administrative assistant in 1968, assuming control of all the secretarial and many of the administrative responsibilities. Her secretarial staff rarely moved on, which says much for her managerial abilities, and she was held in high esteem by her colleagues, both academic and non-academic. They say she became the "pulse" of the department.

Mrs. Brotherston leaves her husband, Grover, three sons, and a daughter.

PROFESSOR REPORTS ON LIFE IN NAIROBI

The following letter has been received from D. Gordon Tyndall, Professor of Finance and University Investment Officer. Dr. Tyndall is field co-ordinator of a project to develop a Faculty of Commerce at the University of Nairobi in Kenya; he also is director of that university's MBA program. The project is sponsored by the Canadian International Development Agency (CIDA).

Dear Friends,

It occurred to me that some of you might be interested in our reactions to Kenya after our first year in one of The University of Alberta's more distant outposts. Some of you may not even know that your University is responsible for a large Canadian aid (CIDA) project in equatorial Africa. There are nine of us on the project now—from a number of Canadian universities—but all hired by The University of Alberta specifically to help in the development of a first-class Faculty of Commerce at the University of Nairobi; not only a first-class faculty, but one which will be viable (i.e. will be self-sustaining) and predominantly African.

If, in fact, you're interested in our reaction I can settle that matter quickly—we think we were very lucky to have been able to come despite problems too numerous to mention. We get depressed at times by the inefficiencies of the university committees, but then we remember similar feelings in Alberta and California and . . .; and we get depressed about confrontations between students and the Administration and all the valuable time that is lost but then we remember similar feelings in Alberta and California and . . .; so you see what I mean about problems. At first it seemed very strange to ride on a bus and be the only one with a white skin, to walk down the street and see almost all black faces, but soon one begins to see the tremendous variations, in the dress, in the facial features, in the human attitudes—in short, one begins to see people. I think that one senses color the most when one goes to a gathering where nearly everyone is white (e.g. the Donovan Maule Theatre, the Nairobi equivalent of the Citadel). At most large social gatherings there is a mixture of white, brown and black, but it is still too close to colonial times for this not to seem a little forced. I think the Asians and Africans feel it as much as we do; it will probably take many generations to rid ourselves of that aspect of our pasts.

And where do I go from there? To tell you that the climate must be the best anywhere in the world, but the telephone system must be one of the worst; that the golf courses are fabulous (I'm now an addict) but there's no curling or hockey or football (rugger, yes); that everyone talks about (1) inflation, (2) the weather, and (3) the inefficiencies that frustrate them.

Perhaps, in concluding, another word about the project is in order. We are convinced that great strides have been made towards the project's goal. We now have a fine MBA program as well as an excellent undergraduate program. This year we have 16 Africans on the faculty (they were 2 in 1971); next year there will be over 20 and we are confident that in 1976-77 roughly 30 (out of an establishment of 36) will be well-trained, young Africans. I am pleased to be associated with you in the project. Its long-term viability is a question that remains to be answered.

BOOKS

Canadian Industrial Relations: A Book of Readings by S.M.A. Hameed, Professor of Business Administration and Commerce, has been published by Butterworths.

UNDERGROUND LIFEFORCE

If you have never noticed the absence of overhead wiring, telephone poles, power lines and hydro towers, or wondered how the many buildings on campus all maintain temperature, or receive electrical power, domestic water, and telephone service, consider it now. Imagine the University criss-crossed by a maze of wiring, strung from one power pole to the next, skirting the lawns around Corbett Hall and across those of the Arts Building. And picture the campus dotted here and there with utility stations housing generators and water pumps next to every major structure.

One alternative, to route this network through large conduits just under the surface of the earth, was obviously rejected by campus developers, perhaps due to the inaccessibility as well as the complexity such a system would entail. Instead of this, an underground utilities corridor extends for some three-and-one-half miles, through which there is access to every major building on campus from the W.W. Cross Institute to University Hospital, to the Jubilee Auditorium, and as far north as the Biological Sciences Building. Within this tunnel, surges the lifeforce of nearly every building on campus.

Aside from the power lines and water mains, there circulate miles of fire alarm and signalling circuits, monitoring system cables, natural gas lines and densely insulated steam lines. The steam lines pictured here can vary in temperature by up to 300°F and were specially designed with loops, expansion joints, and rollers to accommodate expansion and contraction of up to three inches per hundred feet.

A maintenance crew is on duty at all times to take readings, observe any changes, do minor repairs, and keep the tunnels as clean as possible. Riding on small motor bikes they make quick time travelling from branch to branch. A coded layout numbering each station point indicates their location and the direction of each arm of the tunnel.

Designed in 1967 and begun the following year, the tunnel is still under construction with most of the major phases, however, already completed. The tunnel itself varies in thickness and reinforcement; the average density being about one foot, with the exception of those areas under stresspoints such as roadways, particularly under bus routes.

The central cooling plant located to the north of the campus and 155 feet below it at the edge of the North Saskatchewan River, chills water for the purpose of temperature control for most buildings on campus. Cold water drawn from the river is used to condense freon which is, in turn, used to chill recirculated water up above for cooling the buildings and providing special services to the various science labs.

By means of a rather unusual conveyor belt called a man-lift (soon to be redesignated as a person-lift) one can travel up or down the extent of the 155 foot shaft connecting the plant to the campus above. Several members of the Board of Governors successfully managed this precarious journey as part of a tour recently of the cooling plant and adjacent tunnels. Although buses were waiting to deliver those less venturesome souls who might have chosen not to take the lift, the buses returned empty, as everyone present followed the fine example set by Chairman Fred Jenner, and held on for dear life.

Pictured at the top far left is the instrument panel which controls the water intake and monitors the chilling operation of the cooling plant. Bottom left, gives an indication of the size of the chilling units. Top left, is one of several panic exits located throughout the course of the tunnel. Converging toward the centre of the photograph above, are several of the many pipelines extending throughout the tunnel. The redesignated person lift is pictured at the right.
